

SAVE ALLIGATORS AND CROCODILES, SAVE THE WORLD

Many crocodylians are endangered, which means they are at risk of disappearing forever. This is because people hunt them for food and for their skin. People are also destroying and moving into the areas where crocodylians live.

In the 1960s, the American alligator population was quickly disappearing. The American government passed laws that made it illegal to hunt alligators. They also protected alligator land and started a breeding program. Thanks to these efforts, the American alligator is no longer endangered. This success story provides hope for other endangered crocodylians.

How can you help alligators and crocodiles? Tell your family and friends not to buy clothes and other items made from animal skin. If you live near a wetland, you can volunteer to help clean up garbage that can hurt the animals living there. Your actions can help a super crocodylian!
